

Introduction to PyTorch with NLP

PyTorch is a popular open-source deep learning framework developed by Facebook's AI Research lab that provides flexibility and dynamic computational graphs, making it highly favored for research and production purposes. With its intuitive interface, PyTorch allows developers to build and train complex neural networks with ease.

A computation graph is a network of nodes where each node represents an operation or variable, and the edges represent data dependencies between operations. Dynamic computation graphs are particularly useful in Natural Language Processing (NLP), where the input data, such as sentences or sequences, can vary in length and structure. PyTorch's dynamic nature allows the graph to adapt to different input shapes and sizes, making it easier to handle complex tasks like sequence-to-sequence learning, attention mechanisms, and more.

1. PyTorch Tensors and Basics

Tensors are the core data structure in PyTorch, analogous to arrays and matrices in NumPy but with additional capabilities for autodifferentiation and easier device management. A tensor is a multi-dimensional array that serves as the basic building block of PyTorch.

Tensor functions: <https://pytorch.org/docs/stable/tensors.html>

In [436... import torch import numpy as np
```

1.1. Creating Tensors

In [437... a = torch.ones(3,3) print(a) print(type(a)) # checking the data type of a print(a.shape) # checking the shape of a tensor
```

tensor([[1., 1., 1.], [1., 1., 1.], [1., 1., 1.]])
<class 'torch.Tensor'> torch.Size([3, 3])

```
In [438... # Create a tensor from a Python list data = [[1, 2], [3, 4]]
```

```

tensor_from_list = torch.tensor(data) print("Tensor from list:\n", tensor_from_list)

Create a tensor filled with zeros
zeros = torch.zeros((2, 3))
print("\nZeros tensor:\n", zeros)

Create a tensor filled with ones
ones = torch.ones((2, 3)) print("\nOnes tensor:\n", ones)

Create a tensor with random values
random_tensor = torch.rand((2, 3)) print("\nRandom tensor:\n", random_tensor)

Create a tensor with uninitialized values (values will be whatever is in m uninitialized = torch.empty((2, 3)) print("\nUninitialized tensor:\n", uninitialized)

```

Tensor from list:

tensor([[1, 2], [3, 4]])

```

Zeros tensor:

        [0., 0., 0.]])

Ones tensor:

tensor([[1., 1., 1.], [1., 1., 1.]])

```

Random tensor:

tensor([[0.1128, 0.4192, 0.0497], [0.6678, 0.1874, 0.1211]])

Uninitialized tensor:

tensor([[ 5.3335e+03,  4.5801e-41, -2.4720e+25], [ 3.0910e-41,  4.4842e-44,  0.0000e+00]])

1.2. Indexing and Splicing

In [439]...

Create a 3x3 tensor
tensor = torch.arange(9).reshape(3, 3)
print("Original tensor:\n", tensor)

Access a single element (row 2, column 3)
element = tensor[1, 2] print("\nElement at (1, 2):", element)

Slice a sub-tensor (first two rows and columns)
sub_tensor = tensor[:2, :2] print("\nSliced sub-tensor:\n", sub_tensor)

Modify a specific element

```
tensor[0, 0] = 100
print("\nModified tensor:\n", tensor)
```

Original tensor:

tensor([[0, 1, 2], [3, 4, 5], [6, 7, 8]])

Element at (1, 2): tensor(5)

Sliced sub-tensor:

tensor([[0, 1], [3, 4]])
```

Modified tensor:

tensor([[100, 1, 2], [ 3, 4, 5], [ 6, 7, 8]])
```

Arithmetic Operations

In [440... # Create two tensors
a = torch.tensor([1, 2, 3])
b = torch.tensor([4, 5, 6])

Addition
add = a + b print("Addition:", add)

Subtraction
sub = a - b print("Subtraction:", sub)

Multiplication
mul = a * b print("Multiplication:", mul)

Division
div = b / a print("Division:", div)
```

Addition: tensor([5, 7, 9])
Subtraction: tensor([-3, -3, -3])
Multiplication: tensor([ 4, 10, 18])
Division: tensor([4.0000, 2.5000, 2.0000])

1.3. Matrix Operations

In [441... # Create two 2x3 and 3x2 tensors
A = torch.tensor([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]])
B = torch.tensor([[7, 8], [9, 10], [11, 12]])

Matrix multiplication
C = torch.matmul(A, B)
print("Matrix multiplication result:\n", C)
```

Transpose a tensor
A_transposed = A.t() print("\nTransposed A:\n", A_transposed)
```

Matrix multiplication result:

tensor([[ 58,  64], [139, 154]])
```

Transposed A:

tensor([[1, 4], [2, 5],
        [3, 6]])

Common Errors with Matrix Multiplications

Matrix multiplication requires that the number of columns in the first matrix matches the number of rows in the second matrix. If these dimensions don't align, PyTorch will raise a `RuntimeError`.

Solution: Ensure that the tensors have compatible shapes. For example, if A has shape (2, 3), then B should have shape (3, N) where N is any integer.

In [442... import torch

Create two tensors with incompatible shapes for matrix multiplication
A = torch.tensor([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]]) # Shape: (2, 3)
B = torch.tensor([[7, 8], [9, 10]])      # Shape: (2, 2)

Attempt matrix multiplication (this will raise an error)
try:
    C = torch.matmul(A, B)
except RuntimeError as e:

Error: mat1 and mat2 shapes cannot be multiplied (2x3 and 2x2)

1.4. Reshaping Tensors

In [443... # Create a 4x4 tensor
tensor = torch.arange(16).reshape(4, 4)
print("Original tensor:\n", tensor)

Reshape to 2x8
reshaped = tensor.view(2, 8) print("\nReshaped to 2x8:\n", reshaped)

Flatten the tensor flattened = tensor.view(-1) print("\nFlattened tensor:", flattened)
```

Original tensor:

tensor([[ 0,  1,  2,  3], [ 4,  5,  6,  7], [ 8,  9, 10, 11], [12, 13, 14, 15]])
```

Reshaped to 2x8:

tensor([[ 0,  1,  2,  3,  4,  5,  6,  7], [ 8,  9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15]])

Flattened tensor: `tensor([ 0, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15])`

1.5. Concatenating Tensors

```
In [444... # Create two tensors
a = torch.tensor([[1, 2], [3, 4]])
b = torch.tensor([[5, 6], [7, 8]])

Concatenate along rows (dim=0)
concat_rows = torch.cat((a, b), dim=0) print("Concatenated along rows:\n", concat_rows)

Concatenate along columns (dim=1)
concat_cols = torch.cat((a, b), dim=1) print("\nConcatenated along columns:\n", concat_cols)
```

Concatenated along rows:

tensor([[1, 2], [3, 4], [5, 6], [7, 8]])
```

Concatenated along columns:

tensor([[1, 2, 5, 6], [3, 4, 7, 8]])

Common Pitfall

This is a common pitfall that in-compatible tensors are concatenated. In order to correctly concatenate the tensor, the dimensions other than the one it is concatenated on must be same.

In [445... # Create two tensors with incompatible shapes for concatenation
a = torch.tensor([[1, 2], [3, 4]]) # Shape: (2, 2)
b = torch.tensor([[5, 6, 7], [8, 9, 10]]) # Shape: (2, 3)

Attempt concatenation along rows (dim=0)
try:
    result = torch.cat((a, b), dim=0)
except RuntimeError as e:

Attempt concatenation along columns: why will it work?
```

result = torch.cat((a, b), dim=1) print(result)
```

Error: Sizes of tensors must match except in dimension 0. Expected size 2 but got size 3 for tensor number 1 in the list.

tensor([[ 1,  2,  5,  6,  7], [ 3,  4,  8,  9, 10]])
```

1.6. Transposing and Permuting

In [446... # Create a 2x3 tensor tensor = torch.tensor([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]])
print("Original tensor:\n", tensor)

Transpose (swap dimensions)
transposed = tensor.t()
print("\nTransposed tensor:\n", transposed)

For tensors with more than 2 dimensions, use permute
tensor_3d = torch.arange(24).reshape(2, 3, 4) print("\nOriginal 3D tensor shape:", tensor_3d.shape)

Permute dimensions to (3, 2, 4)
permuted = tensor_3d.permute(1, 0, 2) print("Permuted tensor shape:", permuted.shape)
```

Original tensor:

tensor([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]])
```

Transposed tensor:

tensor([[1, 4], [2, 5],
        [3, 6]])
```

Original 3D tensor shape: torch.Size([2, 3, 4])

Permuted tensor shape: torch.Size([3, 2, 4])

```
tensor([[1, 4], [2, 5],
        [3, 6]])
```

Original 3D tensor shape: torch.Size([2, 3, 4])

Permuted tensor shape: torch.Size([3, 2, 4])

1.7. Reduction Operations

```
In [447... # Create a tensor
x = torch.tensor([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]])

Sum all elements
total_sum = torch.sum(x) print("Total sum:", total_sum)

Sum along a specific dimension (rows)
sum_dim0 = torch.sum(x, dim=0)
```

```
print("\nSum along dim=0 (columns):", sum_dim0)

Mean along a specific dimension (columns)
mean_dim1 = torch.mean(x.float(), dim=1) print("\nMean along dim=1 (rows):", mean_dim1)

Maximum value and its index
max_val, max_idx = torch.max(x, dim=1) print("\nMaximum values:", max_val) print("Indices of maximum values:", max_idx)
```

Total sum: tensor(21)

Sum along dim=0 (columns): tensor([5, 7, 9])

Mean along dim=1 (rows): tensor([2., 5.])

Maximum values: tensor([3, 6])

Indices of maximum values: tensor([2, 2])

Common pitfall in Reduction Operations

The dimension specified should be valid

```
In [448... # Create a 2x3 tensor
x = torch.tensor([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]])
print(x.shape)
print('Valid dimensions -', 0, 'to', len(x.shape)-1)
Attempt to sum along an invalid dimension
try:
    result = torch.sum(x, dim=2)
except IndexError as e:
```

torch.Size([2, 3])

Valid dimensions - 0 to 1

Error: Dimension out of range (expected to be in range of [-2, 1], but got 2)

1.8. Automatic Differentiation

```
In [449... # Create a tensor with gradient tracking x = torch.tensor([1.0, 2.0, 3.0], requires_grad=True)

Perform operations
y = x * 2 print(y)
z = y.mean()

Compute gradients
z.backward()

print("Gradient of z w.r. to x:", x.grad)
```

tensor([2., 4., 6.], grad_fn=<MulBackward0>)

Gradient of z w.r. to x: tensor([0.6667, 0.6667, 0.6667])

1.9. Device of tensors

In PyTorch, the location of tensors—whether on a CPU or GPU—directly impacts the performance and functionality of your code. Tensors can be stored on different devices, and operations on tensors must be performed on the same device to avoid errors and inefficiencies.

Importance -

1. Performance Optimization: Moving tensors to the GPU can significantly accelerate computations, as GPUs are designed to handle matrix operations much more efficiently than CPUs. This is especially important for training deep learning models where large amounts of data and complex operations are involved.
2. Error Prevention: PyTorch requires all tensors involved in a computation to be on the same device. If operations are attempted between tensors on different devices (e.g., adding a CPU tensor to a GPU tensor), it will result in a runtime error like `RuntimeError: Expected all tensors to be on the same device, but found at least two devices, cuda:0 and cpu!`. Properly managing tensor locations ensures compatibility and prevents such errors.
3. Memory Management: GPUs have limited memory compared to CPUs. Properly managing tensor locations helps efficiently utilize GPU memory and avoid issues like out-of-memory errors. Moving tensors to the appropriate device only when needed can help balance memory usage across devices.

Below is a code snippet explaining critical aspects of tensor location management in PyTorch, highlighting performance benefits and common pitfalls.

In [450... import torch

Check if a GPU is available device = torch.device("cuda" if torch.cuda.is_available() else ('mps' if tor

Create a tensor on the CPU
x_cpu = torch.tensor([1.0, 2.0, 3.0])

Create a tensor on the GPU (if available)
x_gpu = torch.tensor([4.0, 5.0, 6.0], device=device)

Demonstrating Performance Optimization by moving CPU tensor to GPU
Moving x_cpu to the GPU can accelerate computations
x_cpu = x_cpu.to(device)

Performing operations on the same device (GPU in this case)
result = x_cpu + x_gpu print("Result on GPU:", result) print('\n')
Demonstrating Error Prevention
This will cause an error if x_cpu is not moved to the GPU
```

try:
    # Attempting an operation between tensors on different devices
    x_cpu = torch.tensor([1.0, 2.0, 3.0]) # Back on CPU error_result = x_cpu + x_gpu
except RuntimeError as e:

print('\n')
Demonstrating Memory Management
Moving the result back to the CPU to free up GPU memory result = result.to("cpu") print("Result moved back to CPU:", result)

Result on GPU: tensor([5., 7., 9.], device='cuda:0')

Error: Expected all tensors to be on the same device, but found at least two devices, cuda:0 and cpu!

Result moved back to CPU: tensor([5., 7., 9.])

1.10. Broadcasting

Broadcasting is a method used in PyTorch (and other libraries like NumPy) that allows arithmetic operations on tensors of different shapes by automatically expanding the smaller tensor(s) to match the shape of the larger one. Broadcasting follows a set of rules to make the tensors compatible without explicitly copying data, allowing efficient computation even when the shapes initially do not match.

How is Broadcasting Done?

Broadcasting follows a set of rules to determine how to expand the smaller tensor to match the shape of the larger one:

1. Alignment from the Right: Tensors are aligned from the right when comparing their shapes. For instance, to broadcast (4, 3, 2) with (3, 2), align as follows:

$$\begin{array}{r} (4, 3, 2) \\ (, 3, 2) \end{array}$$

2. Dimension Compatibility: Two dimensions are compatible if:

- They are equal.
- One of them is 1. In this case, the dimension with 1 is stretched to match the other dimension.

3. Expansion: Dimensions with 1 are virtually expanded to match the corresponding dimension of the other tensor without physically copying data.

Consider two tensors A and B:

- Let A be of shape (3, 1):

$$A = \begin{bmatrix} 1 \\ 2 \\ 3 \end{bmatrix}$$

- Let B be of shape (1, 4):

$$B = [10 \quad 20 \quad 30 \quad 40]$$

When performing the operation  $A + B$ , broadcasting expands A and B to a compatible shape (3, 4):

- Expand A along columns:

$$A_{\text{expanded}} = \begin{bmatrix} 1 & 1 & 1 & 1 \\ 2 & 2 & 2 & 2 \\ 3 & 3 & 3 & 3 \end{bmatrix}$$

- Expand B along rows:

$$B_{\text{expanded}} = \begin{bmatrix} 10 & 20 & 30 & 40 \\ 10 & 20 & 30 & 40 \\ 10 & 20 & 30 & 40 \end{bmatrix}$$

Now, you can perform element-wise addition:

$$A + B = \begin{bmatrix} 1 + 10 & 1 + 20 & 1 + 30 & 1 + 40 \\ 2 + 10 & 2 + 20 & 2 + 30 & 2 + 40 \\ 3 + 10 & 3 + 20 & 3 + 30 & 3 + 40 \end{bmatrix} = \begin{bmatrix} 11 & 21 & 31 & 41 \\ 12 & 22 & 32 & 42 \\ 13 & 23 & 33 & 43 \end{bmatrix}$$

In [451]...

import torch

2D tensor (batch of vectors)
tensor_2d = torch.tensor([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]])
print("2D Tensor:")
print(tensor_2d)

1D tensor (vector)
tensor_1d = torch.tensor([10, 20, 30])
print("1D Tensor:")
print(tensor_1d)

Broadcasting
result = tensor_2d + tensor_1d print("Result after broadcasting:") print(result)
```

```

2D Tensor:
tensor([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]])
1D Tensor:
tensor([10, 20, 30])
Result after broadcasting:
tensor([[11, 22, 33], [14, 25, 36]])

```

In [452... import torch

```

Tensor with shape (2, 3)
tensor_2d = torch.tensor([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]])
print("2D Tensor:")
print(tensor_2d)

Tensor with shape (2, 2) - This is incompatible for broadcasting tensor_incompatible = torch.tensor([[10, 20], [30, 40]]) print("Incompatible Tensor:") print(tensor_incompatible)

try:
    result = tensor_2d + tensor_incompatible
except RuntimeError as e:
    print(f"Error: {e}")

```

```

2D Tensor:

        [4, 5, 6]])
Incompatible Tensor:

2. Multiclass Text Classification

We will explore multi-class classification using a real-world dataset of tweets annotated with various emotions. The goal is to build a model that can accurately classify the emotion expressed in a given tweet into one of several categories, such as sadness, enthusiasm, anger, joy, and others.

The dataset `tweet_emotions.csv` contains three columns:

1. `tweet_id`: A unique identifier for each tweet.
2. `sentiment`: The emotion or sentiment expressed in the tweet. This is the target variable with multiple classes, such as empty, sadness, enthusiasm, neutral, and others.
3. `content`: The text of the tweet, representing the input features used for classification.

2.1. Loading the Dataset

A `DataFrame` is a two-dimensional, tabular data structure commonly used in data manipulation and analysis. In Python, the most popular implementation of `DataFrames` is provided by the `Pandas` library.

In this step, we load the dataset containing tweets and their associated emotions using the `pandas` library. The dataset is stored in a `CSV` file, which we read into a `DataFrame` for easier manipulation and analysis.

Download the dataset from this link -

<https://www.kaggle.com/datasets/pashupatigupta/emotion-detection-from-text/data>

Store it in the same directory as this notebook.

In [453... import pandas as pd

Load the CSV file file_path = 'tweet_emotions.csv' df = pd.read_csv(file_path)

2.2. Understanding the Data

In this step, we examine the basic characteristics of the dataset. We'll check the structure of the `DataFrame`, including the column names, data types, and summary statistics. This helps us understand the kind of data we are working with and identify any preprocessing steps that might be necessary.

```
In [454... # Display basic information about the DataFrame print("DataFrame Info:") print(df.head())
```

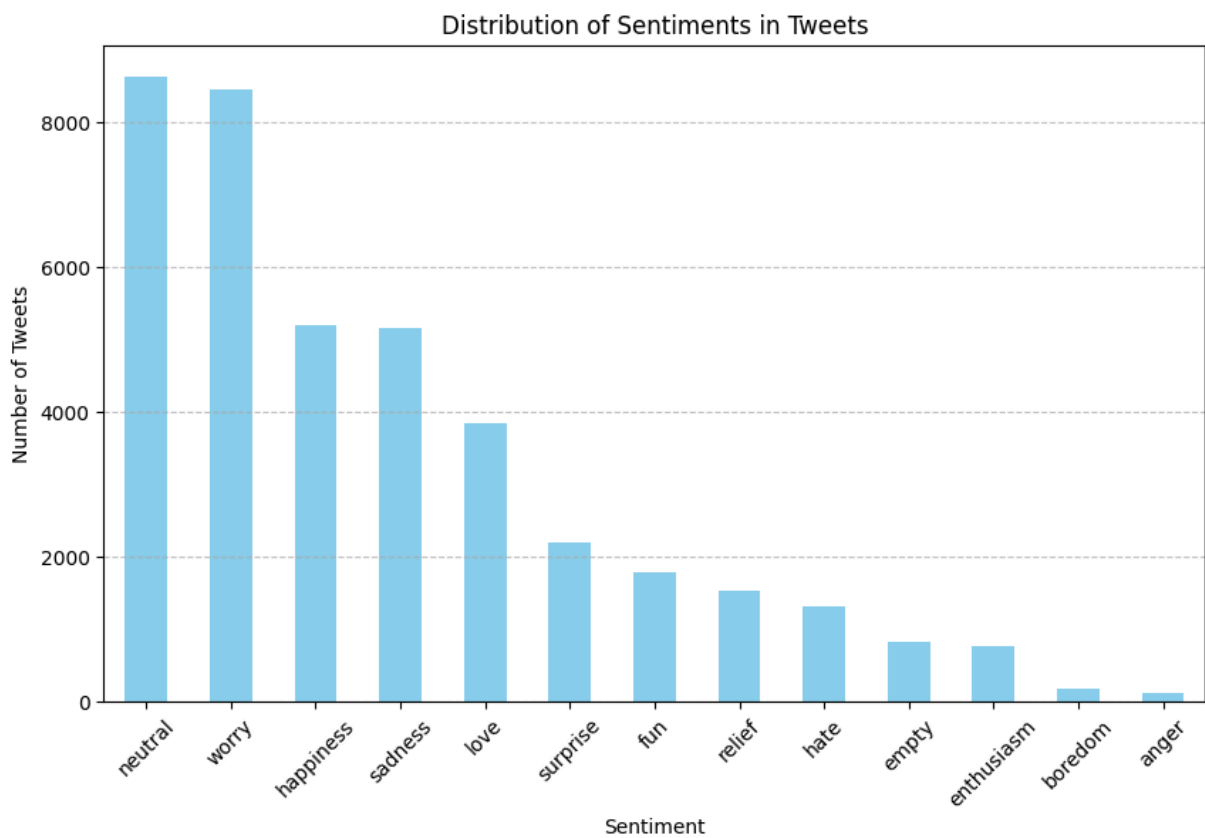

DataFrame Info:

	tweet_id	sentiment	content
0	1956967341	empty	@tiffanylue i know i was listenin to bad habi...
1	1956967666	sadness	Layin n bed with a headache ughhhh...waitin o...
2	1956967696	sadness	Funeral ceremony...gloomy friday...
3	1956967789	enthusiasm	wants to hang out with friends SOON!
4	1956968416	neutral	@dannycastillo We want to trade with someone w...

In [455... import matplotlib.pyplot as plt

Count the number of tweets for each sentiment sentiment_counts = df['sentiment'].value_counts()

Create a bar plot
plt.figure(figsize=(10, 6)) sentiment_counts.plot(kind='bar', color='skyblue') plt.title('Distribution of Sentiments in Tweets') plt.xlabel('Sentiment') plt.ylabel('Number of Tweets') plt.xticks(rotation=45)
plt.grid(axis='y', linestyle='--', alpha=0.7) plt.show()
```

```
In [456... labels_to_keep = ['neutral', 'worry', 'happiness']

Filter the DataFrame to keep only the specified labels
```

df = df[df['sentiment'].isin(labels_to_keep)]

Shuffle the DataFrame randomly
df = df.reset_index(drop=True)

Now df_balanced contains the balanced and shuffled DataFrame
```

As of now, the input and output are texts. But PyTorch (and Machine Learning) only understands numbers. So, we need to convert these to numbers.

Here, the input is Natural Language and output is categorical labels. So, we will preprocess them differently.

2.3. One-Hot Encoding: processing the categorical labels

One-hot encoding is a common technique used to convert categorical data into a numerical format for machine learning algorithms. Unlike label encoding, which assigns an integer to each category, one-hot encoding converts categorical variables into a binary matrix representation.

What is One-Hot Encoding?

In one-hot encoding, each category is represented by a binary vector. The vector has the same length as the number of unique categories, with a 1 in the position corresponding to the category and 0 in all other positions.

Given a set of categories:

One-hot encoding represents these sentiments as follows (for example):

$$\begin{aligned}\{\text{"empty"}\} &\rightarrow [1, 0, 0, 0] \\ \{\text{"sadness"}\} &\rightarrow [0, 1, 0, 0] \\ \{\text{"enthusiasm"}\} &\rightarrow [0, 0, 1, 0] \\ \{\text{"neutral"}\} &\rightarrow [0, 0, 0, 1]\end{aligned}$$

Mathematical Representation

If (  $x$  ) is a categorical feature with (  $n$  ) unique values, one-hot encoding can be defined as:

$$\{\text{OHE}\}(x_i) = [b_1, b_2, \dots, b_n]$$

where:

$$b_j = \begin{cases} 1 & \text{if } x_i \text{ belongs to category } j \\ 0 & \text{otherwise} \end{cases}$$

Advantages and Disadvantages

Advantages:

- Removes any assumption of ordinal relationships between categories, unlike label encoding.
- Works well with algorithms that require input to be in a binary format (e.g., neural networks).

Disadvantages:

- Increases the dimensionality of the dataset, which can lead to a large number of features if there are many unique categories.
- Sparse representation can increase memory usage and computational complexity.

In [457... import pandas as pd from sklearn.preprocessing import OneHotEncoder, LabelEncoder one_hot_encoder = OneHotEncoder(sparse_output=False) encoded_sentiments = one_hot_encoder.fit_transform(df[['sentiment']]) encoded_df = pd.DataFrame(encoded_sentiments, columns=one_hot_encoder.categories_) df = pd.concat([df, encoded_df], axis=1) df.head()

```

2.4. Tokenization

Tokenization is a crucial step in Natural Language Processing (NLP) that involves breaking down text into smaller units called tokens. Tokens can be words, characters, or subwords, depending on the type of tokenization applied. This process is essential for converting raw text into a format that machine learning models can process.

We will study advanced tokenization techniques in the course, but for simplicity, we will stick to basic word-based tokenization.

At its core, tokenization is the process of splitting a string of text into meaningful pieces, such as words or subwords. Each of these pieces is called a token. For instance, given the sentence:

{"I love deep learning!"}

Tokenization might break this sentence into the following tokens:

{Tokens} = {"I"}, {"love"}, {"deep"}, {"learning"}, {"!"}

Consider the following tweet:

"I love deep learning and NLP!"

Word tokenization would break this content into the following tokens:

{Tokens} = {"I"}, {"love"}, {"deep"}, {"learning"}, {"and"}, {"NLP"}, {"!"}

In [458... def tokenize_df(df):

    def tokenize_text(text):
        arr = [word for word in text.split()] return arr

    df['tokenized'] = df['content'].apply(tokenize_text) return df

```

```
In [459... df = tokenize_df(df) print('input -',df.iloc[0]['content']) print('Tokens -',df.iloc[0]['tokenized'])

input - @dannycastillo We want to trade with someone who has Houston tickets, but no one will.

Tokens - ['@dannycastillo', 'We', 'want', 'to', 'trade', 'with', 'someone', 'who', 'has', 'Houston', 'tickets,', 'but', 'no', 'one', 'will.']

In [460... df.head() #check tokenized column on extreme right

Out [460]...

	tweet_id	sentiment	content	happiness	neutral	worry

At this point, we have basic pre-processing completed. You can also try more techniques like stemming, lemmatization, stop words removal, etc., for better performance, but we will skip them for now.

2.5. Data-splitting

In a typical machine learning workflow, the dataset (  $D$  ) is split into three parts:

$$D = D_{\text{train}} \cup D_{\text{val}} \cup D_{\text{test}}$$

- Training Set (  $D_{\text{train}}$  ): This subset is used to train the model, allowing it to learn the patterns and relationships within the data.
- Test Set (  $D_{\text{test}}$  ): This subset is used to evaluate the model's performance on unseen data, providing an estimate of how well the model will generalize to new, unseen data.

The train-test split is crucial for several reasons:

1. Preventing Overfitting: By keeping the test set separate from the training data, we can detect if the model is overfitting—i.e., performing well on the training data but poorly on unseen data.
2. Model Evaluation: The test set serves as a proxy for new data, allowing us to evaluate the model's performance and estimate its accuracy, precision, recall, and other metrics.
3. Generalization: A proper train-test split ensures that the model generalizes well to new data, rather than just memorizing the training data.

Dos:

- Ensure Randomness: Always shuffle your data before splitting to avoid any ordering bias. The `random_state` parameter in `train_test_split` ensures reproducibility.
- Maintain Class Distribution: If your dataset is imbalanced (e.g., more instances of one class than another), use stratified splitting to maintain the class distribution across the train and test sets.

Don'ts:

- Don't Peek at Test Data: Never train or tune your model on the test set. This can lead to overfitting and unrealistic performance estimates.
- Avoid Multiple Tests on the Test Set: Repeatedly testing the model on the same test set can lead to overfitting to the test data. Use cross-validation for model tuning.
- Don't Ignore Data Leakage: Ensure that no information from the test set leaks into the training process. Data leakage can lead to overly optimistic performance metrics.

2.6. Vocabulary Map

A Vocabulary Class is a fundamental component in Natural Language Processing (NLP) that is responsible for mapping words or tokens in a dataset to unique numerical identifiers (indices). This mapping allows the conversion of text data into numerical format, which is essential for feeding it into machine learning models.

What is a Vocabulary Class?

A Vocabulary Class manages the collection of unique tokens (words, subwords, or characters) in a dataset and assigns each token a unique index. The vocabulary typically includes special tokens that serve specific purposes, such as indicating the start or end of a sequence.

Basic functionalities of a Vocabulary Class include:

- Token-to-Index Mapping: Converting each token to a unique index.
- Index-to-Token Mapping: Converting indices back to tokens (useful for decoding model outputs).
- Managing Special Tokens: Handling tokens like padding, unknown words, start-of-sequence, and end-of-sequence.

Key Components of a Vocabulary Class

1. Token-to-Index Mapping:

- The main functionality of the vocabulary is to map each unique token in the dataset to a unique integer index. For instance, if your dataset contains the tokens ["I", "love", "NLP"], the vocabulary might map them as follows:

Token	Index
I	1
love	2
NLP	3

2. Index-to-Token Mapping:

- This is the inverse operation, which allows converting indices back to their respective tokens. This is useful during the model inference phase to convert model predictions back into human-readable text.

3. Special Tokens:

- <PAD>: Used for padding sequences to the same length within a batch. This ensures that all sequences in a batch are of uniform length, making them suitable for batch processing.
- <UNK>: Represents unknown tokens, i.e., tokens that were not in the training vocabulary. This is essential for handling out-of-vocabulary words during inference.
- <SOS>: Indicates the start of a sequence. This is commonly used in sequence generation tasks like machine translation or text generation.
- <EOS>: Marks the end of a sequence. It helps models know when to stop generating further tokens.

Why Are Special Tokens Important?

Special tokens play a critical role in text preprocessing and model training:

- Padding (): When batching sequences of varying lengths, shorter sequences are padded with `<PAD>` tokens to ensure all sequences in a batch have the same length. This padding is essential for efficient batch processing in deep learning frameworks like PyTorch or TensorFlow.
- Unknown Token (): During inference, the model may encounter words that were not seen during training. The `<UNK>` token helps the model handle these situations gracefully, rather than crashing or producing undefined behavior.
- Start-of-Sequence () and End-of-Sequence (): In tasks like sequence-to-sequence modeling, it's important for the model to know when a sequence starts and ends. `<SOS>` and `<EOS>` tokens guide the model during generation and ensure coherent outputs.

Dos:

- Include Special Tokens: Always include special tokens in your vocabulary, especially if your task involves sequence generation or varying sequence lengths.
- Handle Out-of-Vocabulary Words: Ensure your vocabulary can handle out-of-vocabulary words by including an token, which prevents the model from encountering undefined behavior during inference.
- Only make the vocabulary using the training set: In real-world, you don't have test data. So, to adequately represent that, construct your vocabulary using only training set.

2.7. Understanding `max_len`, Padding, and Truncation in NLP

When working with sequential data, such as text, it's common to encounter sequences of varying lengths. In NLP, these sequences might represent sentences, paragraphs, or entire documents, and their lengths can vary significantly. However, most machine learning models, especially those based on deep learning, require input sequences to be of uniform length. This is where concepts like `max_len`, padding, and truncation become essential.

1. What is `max_len` ?

`max_len` is a parameter that defines the maximum length of the sequences that will be fed into the model. Any sequence longer than `max_len` will be truncated, and any sequence shorter than `max_len` will be padded.

2. Why is `max_len` Important?

- Uniform Input Size: Deep learning models networks require input sequences to be of the same length. `max_len` ensures that all sequences in a batch have the same length, allowing for efficient batch processing.
- Memory Management: Setting an appropriate `max_len` helps in managing memory usage. Sequences that are too long might lead to excessive memory consumption, especially in models like Transformers, where memory usage scales with the square of the sequence length.
- Model Efficiency: By limiting the sequence length with `max_len`, you ensure that your model processes only the most relevant parts of the sequence, improving training efficiency and potentially leading to faster convergence.

3. Padding

Padding is the process of adding a special token (usually `<PAD>`) to sequences to ensure they reach the specified `max_len`. Padding is typically added to the end of the sequence, but it can also be added at the beginning in some cases.

Importance of Padding:

- Batch Processing: In machine learning, it's common to process data in batches for efficiency. However, when dealing with sequences of varying lengths, directly batching them is not possible. Padding allows all sequences to be of the same length, enabling efficient batch processing.
- No Information Loss: Padding ensures that no information from shorter sequences is lost, as it only adds neutral tokens that do not contribute to the model's learning process.

Example:

Original sequences:

```
["I love NLP", "Deep learning is fun", "AI is the future"]
```

After padding (assuming `max_len=5`):

```
["I love NLP <PAD> <PAD>", "Deep learning is fun <PAD>", "AI is the future <PAD> <PAD>"]

4. Truncation

Truncation is the process of cutting off sequences that are longer than the specified `max_len`. This is done to ensure that no sequence exceeds the maximum length, which is crucial for maintaining uniformity in input size.

Importance of Truncation:

Handling Long Sequences: In many NLP tasks, some sequences can be much longer than others. Truncation ensures that these long sequences do not dominate the model's memory usage or processing time. Focus on Relevant Information: By truncating sequences, you can focus the model's attention on the most relevant or important parts of the sequence. For instance, in sentiment analysis, the beginning of a review might be more indicative of sentiment than its middle or end.

Example:

Original sequence:

"Natural Language Processing is a fascinating field with many applications in modern technology, ranging from chatbots to machine translation."

After truncation (assuming `max_len=10`):

"Natural Language Processing is a fascinating field with many"

5. Balancing `max_len`, Padding, and Truncation

Choosing the right `max_len` involves balancing the trade-offs between truncation and padding:

Too Short `max_len`: If `max_len` is too short, many sequences will be truncated, leading to potential loss of important information. This can negatively impact model performance, especially if crucial context is lost. Too Long `max_len`: If `max_len` is too long, most sequences will require a lot of padding, leading to inefficiencies in model training. The model might waste resources processing padding tokens, which do not carry any meaningful information.

In [466... # Let us consider we have the following sequence in a batch - token_lists = [
    ["I", "solemnly", "swear", "that", "I", "am", "up", "to", "no", "good"],
    ["It", "does", "not", "do", "to", "dwell", "on", "dreams", "and", "forge"], ["Yer", "a", "wizard", "Harry"],
    ["After", "all", "this", "time?", "Always"]
]

Converting them into token IDs - token_ids_list = [[vocab.get_index(token) for token in tokens] for tokens in for i in token_ids_list:

    print(i)
```

```
[32, 1, 1505, 78, 32, 653, 174, 55, 334, 13]
[4, 624, 11, 77, 55, 39767, 318, 3943, 30, 581, 55, 47]
[1, 12, 1215, 1]
[5073, 391, 432, 26149, 18514]

What's the problem here?

Linear algebra works on fixed-size matrices. If we batch it, then size size of matrix will be (4, ?).

So, truncate and pad.

In [467... max_len = 8 # Set the maximum length

Truncate and pad the sequences
padded_token_ids_list = [] for token_ids in token_ids_list:

    # Truncate the sequence to max_len if size > max_len
    if len(token_ids) > max_len:
        token_ids = token_ids[:max_len]

    # Pad the sequence if it's shorter than max_len
    if len(token_ids) < max_len:
        token_ids += [vocab.get_index("<PAD>")] * (max_len - len(token_ids)) padded_token_ids_list.append(token_ids) for i in padded_token_ids_list:

    print(i)
```

```
[32, 1, 1505, 78, 32, 653, 174, 55]
[4, 624, 11, 77, 55, 39767, 318, 3943]
[1, 12, 1215, 1, 0, 0, 0, 0]
[5073, 391, 432, 26149, 18514, 0, 0, 0]
```

In [468... # Now, let's assume that you are considering that the average index of a doc # of that document on which the output depends.
import torch

padded_tokens = torch.tensor(padded_token_ids_list, dtype=torch.float) features = torch.mean(padded_tokens, axis=1) print(features)

Is this correct?
```

```
tensor([ 316.2500, 5599.8750, 153.6250, 6319.8750])
```

```
In [469... # Solution 1: Masking (Create a mask that identifies padded and non-padded t mask = padded_tokens!=0

print('Mask', mask) mean_ignoring_padding = torch.sum(padded_tokens.float() * mask, axis=1) / to print(mean_ignoring_padding)
```

```
Solution 2: Directly dividing by non-zero elements
count_non_zero_elements = torch.count_nonzero(padded_tokens, axis=1) mean_ignoring_padding = torch.sum(padded_tokens.float(), axis=1) / count_non print(mean_ignoring_padding)

Note, you will never get an error if you do this, but your model will suff
```

             [ True,  True,  True,  True,  True,  True,  True,  True], [ True,  True,  True,  True, False, False, False, False], [ True,  True,  True,  True,  True, False, False, False]])

```

We don't generally apply mask on the token IDs directly (because it seems redundant. But in a network, we apply mask on the output of layers to nullify any contribution from PAD tokens. We shall see this later.

In [470... # We should always keep a mask handy from the token_ids itself, # as that is the only place where it's definitely known

        [ True,  True,  True,  True,  True, False, False, False]])

2.8. Creating a PyTorch Dataset

Implementing a custom dataset class in PyTorch is a crucial step for preparing your data for training machine learning models. The dataset class handles data loading, preprocessing, and batching, ensuring that your data is efficiently fed into the model during training. Below is a detailed guide on how to implement a dataset class, along with explanations on how to handle batching and other important aspects.

In PyTorch, the Dataset class is an abstract class that you can inherit from to create your custom dataset. The two primary methods you need to implement are:

len(self): Returns the total number of samples in the dataset.

getitem(self, idx): Retrieves a single sample from the dataset at the given index idx.

We will create a dataset with padding and truncation like above.

Docs: <https://pytorch.org/docs/stable/data.html>

In [471... import torch from torch.utils.data import Dataset, DataLoader class TextDataset(Dataset):

    def __init__(self, dataframe, vocab, max_len=20):
        """
        Args:
            dataframe (pd.DataFrame): The DataFrame containing tokenized text vocab (Vocabulary): Vocabulary object for token-to-index conversion max_len (int): Maximum length of the sequences (for padding).
        """
        self.dataframe = dataframe self.vocab = vocab self.max_len = max_len def __len__(self):

        return len(self.dataframe)

    def __getitem__(self, idx):
        # Get the tokenized text and labels from the DataFrame
        tokenized_text = self.dataframe.iloc[idx]['tokenized']

        # Get one-hot encoded labels and convert to class index
        # CrossEntropyLoss expects class indices (0, 1, 2, ...), not one-hot one_hot_labels = self.dataframe.iloc[idx][['neutral', 'worry', 'happy']] label = torch.argmax(torch.tensor(one_hot_labels)).item() # Convert

        # Convert tokenized text to indices token_indices = [self.vocab.get_index(token) for token in tokenized_text]

        # Pad or truncate the sequence to the maximum length
        if len(token_indices) < self.max_len:
            token_indices += [self.vocab.get_index("<PAD>")] * (self.max_len - len(token_indices)) else:
            token_indices = token_indices[:self.max_len]

        # Convert to tensors token_indices = torch.tensor(token_indices) return token_indices, label
```

```
In [472... train_dataset = TextDataset(train_df, vocab, max_len=5) val_dataset = TextDataset(val_df, vocab, max_len=5)

How to create batches now? With the dataset class, this becomes super simple.

2.9. DataLoader

`DataLoader` is a class in PyTorch's `torch.utils.data` module that helps to load data from a dataset in an efficient manner. It manages batching, shuffling, parallel data loading, and more, which are essential for training deep learning models.

- Batching: Splits the dataset into small batches of data, making it easier for the model to process and update weights iteratively.

- Shuffling: Allows shuffling of the data to prevent models from learning the order of samples, enhancing model generalization.
- Parallel Data Loading: Supports loading data in parallel using multiple CPU workers, which speeds up the data loading process.
- Custom Sampling: Works seamlessly with custom samplers like RandomSampler to control how data points are selected.

2.10. Model Architecture

The model consists of the following layers:

1. Embedding Layer: Converts tokens into dense vector representations. (Docs: <https://pytorch.org/docs/stable/generated/torch.nn.Embedding.html>)
2. Masking and Summing: Masks padding tokens and sums the embeddings across the sequence.
3. Linear Layer: Applies another linear transformation to the modified embeddings. (Docs: <https://pytorch.org/docs/stable/generated/torch.nn.Linear.html>)
4. Classification Layer: Outputs the class scores for each input sequence. (Docs: <https://pytorch.org/docs/stable/generated/torch.nn.Linear.html>)

The first dimension of input is always the batch size, and all the neural network layers are equipped to handle this scenario. So, for simple operations like forward passes from network layers, you will never need to handle batching explicitly.

In PyTorch, all models are extended from `nn.Module` because it serves as the base class for all neural network modules, providing essential functionalities that are crucial for building and training deep learning models. Here's why extending from `nn.Module` is important:

1. Parameter Management

- `nn.Module` automatically registers all the layers (and their parameters) defined within the model. This allows PyTorch to easily access and manage these parameters for operations like training, saving, and loading the model.

2. Forward Propagation

- `nn.Module` defines the structure that allows you to override the forward method, which is where the forward pass of the network is defined. When you extend from `nn.Module`, you define how data flows through your model by implementing the forward method.

3. Module Nesting

- `nn.Module` allows for the creation of complex models by composing simpler sub-modules. When sub-modules (layers, blocks, etc.) are added as attributes of a custom `nn.Module`, they are automatically registered and their parameters are included in the parent module's parameters.

4. Utility Functions

- `nn.Module` provides a variety of utility functions like `.to()` for moving the model to different devices (CPU/GPU), `.eval()` and `.train()` for setting the model's mode, and methods for saving/loading model parameters.

5. Training and Inference

- By extending from `nn.Module`, your custom model can easily integrate with PyTorch's training loop utilities like optimizers and loss functions. The backward pass and parameter updates are handled smoothly when using an `nn.Module`.

In [475... vocab_size = len(vocab) model = SimpleNLPModel(vocab_size, 128, 32, 8)

```

2.11. Forward Pass

Taking a batch input and passing it through the model to get the predictions

In [476... batch_input = torch.tensor([0] * 10).reshape(2,5)
model = SimpleNLPModel(vocab_size, 128, 32, 8)

#Executing the below code will run one forward pass on the model out = model(batch_input) print(out) print(out.shape)

Notice that the first dimension is already two, accounting for the batch.

```

tensor([[ -0.0676, -0.1328, -0.1230, -0.0406, -0.2027, -0.1491, -0.0697, -0.02 82], [ -0.0676, -0.1328, -0.1230, -0.0406, -0.2027, -0.1491, -0.0697, -0.02 82]]), grad_fn=<AddmmBackward0>)
torch.Size([2, 8])

Common Pitfalls

The embedding layer's vocab size should be correctly defined, and all token indices should be between 0 to n-1.

In [477... # If you define your vocab size incorectly, and give an index that's < 0 or batch_input = torch.tensor([len(vocab)+1] * 10).reshape(2,5)

    out = model(batch_input)
except IndexError as e:

Common Pitfalls

Data and model should be on the same device to work.

In [478... device = 'cuda' if torch.cuda.is_available() else ('mps' if torch.backends.m

```

In [479... batch_input = batch_input.to(device=device) print('Device of batch - ', batch_input.device) print('Device of model - ', next(model.parameters()).device)

except RuntimeError as e:

```

```

```

```

Device of model - cpu

Error - Expected all tensors to be on the same device, but found at least two devices, cpu and cuda:0! (when checking argument for argument index in method wrapper_CUDA__index_select)

2.12. Softmax

Softmax is a mathematical function used in machine learning, particularly in classification tasks. It converts raw scores (logits) from a model into probabilities by normalizing them. The output is a probability distribution where each value represents the likelihood of each class, and all probabilities sum up to 1.

Formula: For a vector  $z = [z_1, z_2, \dots, z_n]$ , the softmax function is given by:

$$\text{Softmax}(z_i) = \frac{e^{z_i}}{\sum_j e^{z_j}}$$ where  $e$  is the base of the natural logarithm,  $z_i$  is the raw score for class  $i$ , and the denominator sums over all classes to normalize the scores.

Softmax is commonly used in the final layer of a classification model to output probabilities for each class.

While working with softmax in pytorch, the dim parameter dictates across which dimension the softmax operations is done. Basically, the softmax operation will transform your input into a probability distribution i.e. the sum of all elements will be 1. The below example shows the difference between using dim=0 or dim=1 for a 2D input tensor (supposing the first dimension for the batch size, and the second for the number of classes).

Docs: <https://pytorch.org/docs/stable/generated/torch.nn.functional.softmax.html>

In [480... # input tensor of dimensions B x C, B = number of batches, C = number of cla inputs = torch.rand(size=(4, 4), dtype=torch.float32) soft_dim0 = torch.softmax(inputs, dim=0)
soft_dim1 = torch.softmax(inputs, dim=1)
print('* INPUTS ****')
print(inputs)
print('* SOFTMAX DIM=0 ****')
print(soft_dim0)
print('* SOFTMAX DIM=1 ****')
print(soft_dim1)
```

        [0.2324, 0.2683, 0.2784, 0.2208]])

2.13. Backward Pass

Calculating the gradients and updating them. After the forward pass, first, loss will be calculated and then gradients will be calculated.

Cross-Entropy Loss

Cross-entropy is a loss function used to measure the difference between two probability distributions. In classification tasks, it measures how well the predicted probability distribution (obtained from softmax) matches the true distribution (actual class labels).

Formula: For a single data point, cross-entropy loss  $L$  is given by:

$$L = - \sum_i y_i \log(p_i)$$

where:

- $y_i$  is the true probability (usually 1 for the correct class and 0 for others),
- $p_i$  is the predicted probability for class  $i$ .

Usage: Cross-entropy is used to train classification models by minimizing the difference between the predicted probabilities and the actual labels. It is particularly effective in guiding the model to produce accurate probability distributions.

Docs: <https://pytorch.org/docs/stable/generated/torch.nn.CrossEntropyLoss.html>

In [481... criterion = nn.CrossEntropyLoss()
```

Common Pitfalls -

1. Both model output (predictions) and labels should be on the same device, of the same shape
2. Both should be float values
3. Softmax is already implemented implicitly in the CrossEntropyLoss. No need to do it again.

dummy_labels_wrong=torch.tensor([1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9,10]).reshape(2,5)
dummy_labels = torch.tensor([1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9,10,11,13,12,14,15,16]).reshape(2,8)
#Executing the below code will run one forward pass on the model

Note, the values of parameters still didn't change. It is because how they is determined through an algorithm, called the Optimizer.

2.14. Optimizers

Optimizers are algorithms or methods used to adjust the weights of neural networks to minimize the loss function during training. They update the model parameters based on the computed gradients from backpropagation, guiding the model towards better performance. Different optimizers, such as SGD (Stochastic Gradient Descent), RMSprop, Adam, etc., have unique ways of adjusting the learning rates and handling gradients, which can impact the speed and stability of training.

The Adam optimizer is chosen because it is efficient, works well with large datasets and models, and often provides faster and more stable convergence than traditional optimizers like SGD.

Common pitfall with backward pass

If you see, the weights adjusted, but the model still has gradient values stored. If we repeat this step, gradients of the next batch will be added. This will not throw an error, but internally, it will add the gradients of the next step with current step, and so on.

This is not desired in ideal scenario. So, we do an additional step called `optimizer.zero_grad()` to zero out these accumulated gradients. This helps to start fresh in next batch.

In [489... batch_input_2 = torch.tensor([1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9,10]).reshape(2,5)
dummy_labels_2 = torch.tensor([1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9,10,11,13,12,14,15,16]).resh dummy_labels_2 = dummy_labels_2.to(torch.float32) out_2 = model(batch_input_2) loss = criterion(out_2, dummy_labels_2) loss.backward()

If you don't handle them properly, your program won't throw any errors, but not allow your model to train properly. So, please make sure you handle these issues.

2.15. Saving Model Weights

When training deep learning models, it's essential to save your model's state so you can resume training later, evaluate the model, or deploy it to production. PyTorch provides mechanisms to save and load different parts of your model, such as:

Model Weights (state_dict): This saves the model's learned parameters.

Entire Model: Saving the entire model includes the model architecture and weights.

Optimizer State: This saves the state of the optimizer, which is important for resuming training with the same learning rate schedule and momentum.

Epoch and Loss Information: Saving the current epoch and loss allows you to resume training from a specific point.

Each of these components is essential depending on your use case. For example, if you only need the model for inference, saving the state_dict might be sufficient. However, if you want to continue training, you'll need to save the optimizer state and epoch information as well.

In [495... def save_checkpoint(model, optimizer, epoch, loss, file_path='checkpoint.pth') optimizer (torch.optim.Optimizer): The optimizer whose state needs to be saved.
    """

        epoch (int): The current epoch number.
        loss (float): The current loss value.
        file_path (str): The path to the file where the checkpoint will be saved.
    """
    checkpoint = { # create a dictionary with all the state information
        'epoch': epoch,
        'model_state_dict': model.state_dict(),
        'optimizer_state_dict': optimizer.state_dict(),
        'loss': loss
    }
    torch.save(checkpoint, file_path) print(f"Checkpoint saved to {file_path}")

    # Example usage:
    # save_checkpoint(model, optimizer, epoch, loss)
```

```
In [496... model = SimpleNLPModel(vocab_size, 128, 32, 5)

Common Pitfall

The architecture of the model/optimizer should be the same as the ones for which weights are saved, otherwise, they are not compatible.

In [498... model = SimpleNLPModel(vocab_size, 128, 32, 8) # notice the change in output
try:
    load_checkpoint('./pytorch_checkpoints/demo_1.pth', model, optimizer)
except RuntimeError as e:

```

```

Error - Error(s) in loading state_dict for SimpleNLPModel:
      size mismatch for classifier.weight: copying a param with shape torch h.Size([5, 32]) from checkpoint, the shape in current model is torch.Size([8, 32]). size mismatch for classifier.bias: copying a param with shape torch.S ize([5]) from checkpoint, the shape in current model is torch.Size([8]).

In [499... model = SimpleNLPModel(vocab_size, 128, 32, 5) # these will load randomly in # to resume training, you should first load the trained weights of the last model = model.to(device)
try:
    load_checkpoint('./pytorch_checkpoints/demo_1.pth', model, optimizer)
except RuntimeError as e:

```

Checkpoint loaded from ./pytorch_checkpoints/demo_1.pth

Dos and Don'ts

- Do save your model's state_dict regularly during training, especially when working on long-running experiments.
- Do save the optimizer state if you plan to resume training. Sometimes you dynamically change your learning rate during training, and therefore, re-loading the correct learning rate for that epoch is crucial to resume training.
- Don't use torch.save() to save the entire model unless you are sure the model class will not change. Saving the state_dict is more flexible and safer.
- Do use map_location when loading a model trained on a different device.

2.16. Early Stopping

Early Stopping is a popular regularization technique used in machine learning to prevent overfitting during the training of models, particularly neural networks. It works by monitoring the performance of the model on a validation set and halting the training process when the model's performance starts to degrade, indicating that further training would lead to overfitting rather than improvements.

In [500... class EarlyStopping:
    def __init__(self, patience=5, min_delta=0.001):
        self.patience = patience self.min_delta = min_delta self.best_score = None # Initialize with None to correctly handle t self.early_stop = False self.counter = 0

    def __call__(self, val_loss):
        if self.best_score is None: # First time, set the best score self.best_score = val_loss elif val_loss < self.best_score - self.min_delta: # If the current self.best_score = val_loss # Update the best score self.counter = 0 # Reset the counter since we have an improveme else:
            self.counter += 1 # No improvement if self.counter >= self.patience: # Check if we've hit the pati self.early_stop = True # Trigger early stopping
```

2.17. Training Loop

The training loop updates the model's parameters by processing batches of data, calculating loss, and backpropagating gradients to minimize the loss.

In [501... import torch.optim as optim from tqdm import tqdm
```

2.17. Addressing Overfitting with Regularization Techniques From your loss plot, it's clear that the model is overfitting - the training loss continues to decrease while validation loss starts increasing after epoch 2-3. Here are several strategies to combat overfitting: ### Key Strategies: 1. Reduce Learning Rate: Lower learning rates help the model converge more slowly and avoid overfitting 2. Add Dropout: Randomly sets some neurons to zero during training to prevent over-reliance on specific features 3. Reduce Model Complexity: Smaller hidden dimensions can prevent the model from memorizing the training data 4. Early Stopping: Stop training when validation loss starts increasing 5. Weight Decay (L2 Regularization): Penalizes large weights to encourage simpler models 6. Reduce Number of Epochs: Train for fewer epochs to prevent overfitting

Additional Hyperparameter Tuning Suggestions If the regularized model above still shows signs of overfitting, you can try these additional techniques: Further Regularization: - Increase dropout rate to 0.4-0.5 - Increase weight decay to 1e-3 - Reduce learning rate further to 0.0001 Data Augmentation (for NLP): - Add synonym replacement - Random word deletion - Sentence shuffling Model Architecture Changes: - Use even smaller embedding dimensions (32 or 16) - Add batch normalization - Use different optimizers (SGD with momentum) Training Strategy: - Use learning rate scheduling (reduce on plateau) - Implement gradient clipping - Use different loss functions (Label smoothing) Example of further reduced hyperparameters:

```
In [509... # Example of even more aggressive regularization if needed aggressive_hyperparams = {
    'batch_size': 8,          # Even smaller batches
    'embedding_dim': 32,     # Much smaller embeddings
    'hidden_dim': 16,        # Much smaller hidden layer
    'learning_rate': 0.0001, # Much slower learning
    'num_epochs': 5,         # Fewer epochs
    'dropout_rate': 0.5,     # Higher dropout 'weight_decay': 1e-3,    # Stronger L2 regularization
    'patience': 2           # Earlier stopping print("Aggressive regularization hyperparameters (use if overfitting persists) for param, value in aggressive_hyperparams.items():
}

    print(f"    {param}: {value}")

print("\nKey takeaways for preventing overfitting:") print("1. Start with aggressive regularization and gradually relax if underf print("2. Monitor the gap between training and validation loss") print("3. Use early stopping to prevent training too long") print("4. Smaller models often generalize better than larger ones") print("5. Dropout is one of the most effective regularization techniques")
```

Aggressive regularization hyperparameters (use if overfitting persists):

```
batch_size: 8 embedding_dim: 32 hidden_dim: 16
learning_rate: 0.0001
num_epochs: 5 dropout_rate: 0.5 weight_decay: 0.001 patience: 2
```

Key takeaways for preventing overfitting:

1. Start with aggressive regularization and gradually relax if underfitting
2. Monitor the gap between training and validation loss
3. Use early stopping to prevent training too long
4. Smaller models often generalize better than larger ones
5. Dropout is one of the most effective regularization techniques

When evaluating a multi-class classification model, it's essential to understand a variety of metrics to get a comprehensive view of your model's performance. Below are some key metrics:

1. Confusion Matrix

A Confusion Matrix is a table that is often used to describe the performance of a classification model. Each row of the matrix represents the instances of the true class, while each column represents the instances of the predicted class. In a multi-class classification scenario, the confusion matrix can provide detailed insight into how well the model is performing for each class.

- True Positives (TP): The number of instances correctly predicted as belonging to a class.
- False Positives (FP): The number of instances incorrectly predicted as belonging to a class.
- True Negatives (TN): The number of instances correctly predicted as not belonging to a class.
- False Negatives (FN): The number of instances incorrectly predicted as not belonging to a class.

The confusion matrix allows you to see not only the accuracy of the predictions but also where the model is getting confused between classes.

2. Precision

Precision is a metric that tells us how many of the instances predicted as positive (or as a specific class in multi-class classification) are actually positive (or belong to that class). It is calculated as:

$$\text{Precision} = \frac{\text{True Positives}}{\text{True Positives} + \text{False Positives}}$$

High precision indicates that the model has a low false positive rate. In a multi-class context, precision is typically averaged across all classes to give a single precision score, often using the weighted average to account for class imbalance.

3. Recall

Recall (also known as sensitivity or true positive rate) tells us how many of the actual positive instances (or a specific class) were correctly identified by the model. It is calculated as:

$$\text{Recall} = \frac{\text{True Positives}}{\text{True Positives} + \text{False Negatives}}$$

High recall indicates that the model has a low false negative rate. Like precision, recall can also be averaged across all classes.

4. F1 Score

The F1 Score is the harmonic mean of precision and recall. It provides a single metric that balances both precision and recall:

$$\text{F1 Score} = 2 \times \frac{\text{Precision} \times \text{Recall}}{\text{Precision} + \text{Recall}}$$

The F1 score is especially useful when you need to find a balance between precision and recall, and there is an uneven class distribution (one class might be more frequent than others).

5. Accuracy

Accuracy is the simplest and most commonly used metric, which measures the proportion of correctly predicted instances (both true positives and true negatives) out of the total number of instances:

$$\text{Accuracy} = \frac{\text{Number of Correct Predictions}}{\text{Total Number of Predictions}}$$

While accuracy gives a good general sense of the model's performance, it might not be the best metric in cases of class imbalance. In such cases, precision, recall, and F1 score provide a more detailed view.

How These Metrics are Computed

During model evaluation:

- The confusion matrix provides a summary of the predictions made by the model compared to the actual labels.
- Precision and recall focus on the performance of the model for each class, especially in distinguishing between correct and incorrect predictions.

- The F1 score offers a balance between precision and recall, particularly useful when you want to ensure that both false positives and false negatives are minimized.
- Accuracy gives an overall measure of how often the model's predictions are correct, but should be interpreted carefully in the presence of class imbalance.

These metrics are essential for understanding the strengths and weaknesses of your classification model, guiding you toward potential improvements or areas needing further tuning.

Other Reasons of Inaccuracies -

1. Our preprocessing was very basic and we used word-tokenization. Typically, NLP systems use more complex preprocessing to clean the data, like removal of stop words, removal of less frequent words, stemming, etc., and use sub-word tokenization. They also handle punctuations differently.

2. We used a very simple feedforward network. This is not very suited for complex NLP tasks, as they don't capture the semantic relationships well. Using RNNs/LSTMs/Transformers will yield better results.
3. Class imbalance - We can see that the first two classes have around 3500 more data instances than the third class (happiness). This also contributes to inaccuracies, as the training data doesn't represent that. There are ways to avoid this class imbalance problem like over/under sampling, generating synthetic data, etc.

2.20 Naive, Regex-based Classifier.

In this section, we'll create a naive, regex-based classifier as a baseline to compare against our neural network. While we expect this approach to be weaker, it has the advantage of being highly interpretable and can help us understand what patterns might be driving sentiment classification.

Online tools such as regex101.com is useful for fixing errors in your regex expressions.

In [573... # build naive classifier function which uses hardcoded regex patterns # to find the most common bigrams for each sentiment in the test set.
import re

class RegexSentimentClassifier:
    """
    A naive regex-based sentiment classifier that looks for hardcoded patterns associated with each sentiment class.
    """

    def __init__(self):
        # Define regex patterns for each sentiment based on our analysis
        # These patterns are hardcoded based on common sentiment indicators self.patterns = {
            'happiness': [
                r'\b(happy|joy|excited|great|awesome|wonderful)\b', r'[!]{2,}', # Multiple exclamation marks
                r':\)|:D|:-\)', # Happy emoticons
            ],
            'worry': [
                r'\b(worry|worried|anxious|stress|stressed)\b', r'\b(problem|issue|trouble)\b',

Summary and Key Learnings

This tutorial provided a comprehensive introduction to PyTorch with a focus on natural language processing (NLP). We covered fundamental PyTorch concepts such as tensors, operations, and device management, then applied these concepts to a real-world NLP task: multi-class text classification using a dataset of tweets annotated with various emotions. Here's a brief summary of what we covered:

1. Introduction to PyTorch and Tensors:

- We explored PyTorch's dynamic computation graph, which allows for flexible and efficient model building, particularly useful in NLP tasks where input data can vary in length and structure.

- Tensors, the core data structure in PyTorch, were introduced along with basic operations such as indexing, slicing, and arithmetic.

2. Data Preparation and Preprocessing:

- We loaded and explored the tweet dataset, performed one-hot encoding for categorical labels, and implemented basic tokenization.
- We discussed the importance of padding, truncation, and handling different sequence lengths in NLP, ensuring all input data is of uniform size for model processing, and how to do these correctly.

3. Building a Vocabulary and DataLoader:

- We created a custom Vocabulary class to map tokens to unique indices, including handling special tokens like `<PAD>`, `<UNK>`, `<SOS>`, and `<EOS>`.
- A custom PyTorch Dataset class was implemented to handle tokenized data, padding, and truncation, and a DataLoader was used to efficiently batch and shuffle the data.

4. Model Implementation:

- We implemented a simple feedforward neural network for text classification, highlighting the importance of embedding layers, masking, and the forward pass.
- The model was trained using a well-defined training loop, with early stopping to prevent overfitting, and checkpoints were saved to preserve the model's state during training.

5. Model Evaluation and Inference:

- We evaluated the model using a test dataset and calculated common classification metrics like accuracy, precision, recall, and F1 score.
- A confusion matrix was plotted to visualize model performance across different classes.
- We explored model inference, using the trained model to predict sentiments for new text inputs.

Key Learnings

- PyTorch Flexibility: PyTorch's dynamic computational graph and tensor operations make it a powerful tool for developing deep learning models, particularly in the NLP domain, where input data can be highly variable.
- Data Preprocessing: Proper data preprocessing, including tokenization, padding, and truncation, is crucial in NLP tasks to ensure that models can effectively learn from and generalize to diverse text data.
- Model Building and Training: Building a neural network in PyTorch involves careful design of layers, loss functions, and optimizers. Early stopping and checkpointing are essential practices to avoid overfitting and ensure the ability to resume training.

- Evaluation Metrics: Understanding and applying appropriate evaluation metrics, such as accuracy, precision, recall, and F1 score, is vital for assessing model performance, especially in multi-class classification tasks.
- Model Inference: Model inference in NLP requires careful consideration of tokenization and the handling of out-of-vocabulary words. The use of embeddings and proper softmax application are key to making accurate predictions.

Conclusion

This tutorial provided a solid foundation for using PyTorch in NLP, covering the entire workflow from data preprocessing to model evaluation and inference. While we used a simple feedforward network for demonstration, more advanced models like RNNs, LSTMs, or Transformers would likely yield better performance for complex NLP tasks. The key takeaway is that PyTorch offers the flexibility and tools necessary to build, train, and evaluate deep learning models effectively, making it an excellent choice for NLP and other machine learning tasks.
